American Automobiles Of The Fifties

The 1950s were pivotal for the American automobile industry. The post-World War II era brought a wide range of new technologies to the automobile consumer, and a host of problems for the independent automobile manufacturers. The industry was maturing in an era of rapid technological change; mass production and the benefits from economies of scale led to innovative designs and greater profits, but stiff competition between the automakers. By the end of the decade, the industry had ...

American automobile industry in the 1950s - Wikipedia

After two years of shortages and restriction, the U.S. automobile industry enjoyed in 1953 what promised to be one of its best years. One of the main factors in this production upswing was the government's relaxation of controls on steel, copper and aluminum. The only major hindrance to production was a $70 million fire at GM's Hydramatic plant in Livonia, Michigan.

Cars in the 1950s: History, Pictures, Facts & More

The decade began with 25 million registered automobiles on the road, most of which predated World War II and were in poor condition; no automobiles or parts were produced during the war owing to rationing and restrictions. By 1950, most factories had made the transition to a consumer-based economy, and more than 8 million cars were produced that year alone. By 1958, there were more than 67 million cars registered in the United States, more than twice the number at the start of the ...

So in the 1950s and 1960s American Automobiles would come to resemble the jet with it's tail fins. It was doubtful that any fin would help an automobile go any faster than it's engine could propel it. However, before the 1950s and 1960s were over, the builders in Detroit would be adding fins to every car they could.

No decade in history was better parodied by the automobile. While the fashion and architecture of the day portrayed conformity the American car screamed out the Country's optimism and enthusiasm in a decade of hope. Detroit's car manufacturers looked at conformity as an alien concept and did everything in their power to excite buyers to flock to their new car showrooms. You couldn't get ...

Of particular emphasis here are the cars of the fifties, a unique, or some might say grotesque, period in the history of the American automobile. Some, like me, recall it with fondness. The Second World War put a temporary end to automobile production. The factories that had made them turned out tanks and army vehicles for the duration of the conflict.

From its first sensational post-war design through its ever-larger and more heavily gilded behemoths, no automaker more perfectly traced the arc of Fifties America than Mercury. In between, Ford Motor Company's middle child produced models in great variety, bracketing both extremes of the middle-priced market.

The Fifties is a sweeping social, political, economic, and cultural history of the ten years that Halberstam regards as seminal in determining what our nation is today. Halberstam offers portraits of not only the titans of the age: Eisenhower Dulles, Oppenheimer, MacArthur, Hoover, and Nixon, but also of Harley Earl, who put fins on cars; Dick and Mac McDonald and Ray Kroc, who mass-produced the American hamburger; Kemmons Wilson, who placed his Holiday Inns along the nation's roadsides; U-2 ...
