Asia and the major powers by Robert A. Scalapino, 1972, American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research edition, in English

Asia and the major powers (1972 edition) | Open Library

This article examines the profound changes taking place in the relations between Southeast Asia (both as a region and as component states) and the great powers, and the factors that are driving them. In the cold war era, a somewhat simplified structure of relationships existed between the Southeast Asian states and the great powers. This structure was conditioned and shaped essentially by ideological conflict and by great power rivalry in the region.

China and the Major Powers in East Asia - Brookings

The foreign policy of the People's Republic of China has been dominated in recent decades by the problems of dealing with the other major powers in East Asia. Although many ideological, political, and economic aims have shaped particular Chinese policies, Peking's dominant concern has been national security. Since the late 1960s, its leaders have viewed the Soviet Union as the primary threat to China and have pursued a distinctive, Maoist, balance-of-power strategy against it.
