The traditional and most common family structure in China is the three-generation family household, which includes grandparents, parents and children. Grandparents usually assume the responsibility of taking care of their grandchildren while the parents work during the day. As such, the connections and ties among each family member tends to be very strong. Children usually take care of their parents and grandparents after they grow up. The concept of family is crucial in Chinese ...

If you want to understand the world we live in, there's no way to ignore China. On the Change and Tradition summer program, we travel to remote communities where ethnic minorities strive to balance traditions with new opportunities. We visit dense urban neighborhoods where demolition is underway and learn about how life is changing as developers move in and residents relocate. As we travel across China by foot, train, bus and boat, we learn just how diverse it is. We witness the amazing ...

"Change" and "Tradition" are often seen as two distinct, orienting stances for how the church should navigate today's currents and prepare for tomorrow's. However, I would like to clarify how fundamentally similar these are. Ultimately, I hope to propose a truce between the two in the spirit of love and sound judgment [1]. Tradition Versus Change. Traditionalists see themselves as ...
