The Dweller On Threshold

The real Dweller on the Threshold is formed of the despair and despondency of the neophyte, who is called upon to give up all his old affections for kindred, parents and children, as well as his aspirations for objects of worldly ambition, which have perhaps been his associates for many incarnations. When called upon to give up these things, the neophyte feels a kind of blank, before he realizes his higher possibilities. After having given up all his associations, his life itself seems to ...

The Dweller on the Threshold, also known as the "shadow self," was a concept found in the stories of the Nez Perce tribe indigenous to the Twin Peaks region. In the stories of the Black Lodge , the Dweller on the Threshold represented the sum total of a person's dark, negative, unresolved qualities at the time of their death.

The dweller on the threshold is the demon's mask - a shell similar to the nature of the Qliphoth, yet much less powerful - which is brought to life by our self-inflicted fears, pains and angsts to let go of the illusion of our ego. Thus by locking ourselves into the confined space of our egos below the veil of Paroketh, it is us who bring forth the dweller on the threshold.

Van Morrison - Dweller on the Threshold Lyrics | Genius Lyrics

The Dweller on the Threshold is all that man is, apart from the higher spiritual self; it is the third aspect of divinity, as expressed in and through the human mechanism. This third aspect must be eventually subordinated to the second aspect, the soul." (Esoteric Psychology, Vol. II, p. 312) "Memory . . . is not simply just a faculty of the mind, as is so often supposed, but it is essentially a creative power. It is basically an aspect of thought, and - coupled with imagination - is a ...
